v1 So now our time is almost realised:

The emptiness within us can no more be disguised;
 Our emotions now are lifeless, our senses paralysed;
 And with a harshness in our stomach, and a coldness on our skin,
 We cannot help but let the long slow death of life begin;
 A cancer spreading everywhere it can,
 Through this pungent place,
 Where your acid face,
 And accusing eyes
 Mark the sad demise
 Of the single most fragile empire known to man.

v2 But the cancer too will one day die away,
Giving back our souls to live another day,
And forging back the colour to a world once stained with grey;
And with a texture in our outlook, and a structure in our heart,
We'll rise and build the city our madness tore apart,
Resume again from where it all began;
In the place back there,
Where your shining hair,
And your sparkling eyes
All reflect the rise
Of the single greatest empire known to man.
