v1 In the shadows of each other,
Where two formless people hide,
Lurks the swirling shape of something
They used to feel inside,
There's little more to do now
That might just bring to one
The fractures of the many things
They've each already done,
Except the vaguest impulse
Of a distant memory,
A teasing self reminder
Of how love used to be;

v2 In the echoes of each other,
Where two hollow voices stray,
Are the remnants of the breeze
On which I love you's drift away,
There's little more to add now
That might just do instead
To rectify the far too much
They've each already said,
Except perhaps a whisper
Of a voice that lingers yet,
A softened re-expression
Of love they can't forget;

v3 In the shelters of each other,
Or the oceans in between,
Hangs a gentle swell of something
They both just might have been
